We hear little from Manila, as almost every source of information outside of the ably-censored Spanish papers published at the capital, is practically closed. The news place at noon at Kennedy's Town Repotherefore—if news it can be called—consists of either remours, or officially-cooked misstatements. From the general teneur of the rumours, however, it may be safely stated that the Spanish authorities are not making great progress in the suppression of the rebellion. This, from a tradal point of view, is to be regretted, as it points to a prolonged period of unsettled commercial conditions. We heard several days ago that the Spanish troops had suffered a severe reverse at the hands of the THE two Chinese naval officers, Lieutenants | rebels, and that the Spanish loss was about 300. JACKETS.

SERIOUS ROWS AMONG BLUE "CENTURION" v. " DAYARD." Though France and England are nominally friendly Powers, the blue-tackets of the two nationalities stationed here have been waging a private war for the last week or so; and it is disgmeeful to note that so hopelessly remiss in some respect was the control exercised over the crews of the Bayard and Conturion—the French and British flagships respectively—that in the end, to avert further bloodshed and rioting, the Admirals, or whoever else looks after such matters, had to come to an understanding that liberty would be denied each other's crows on alternate days, so that some sort of peace might be looked forward to. The bickerings began last Sunday-week, when a drunken French sailor gave a British brother in bravery a smack over the neck as a mark of playful esteem. The strative than those of the Gaul, told the Frenchman not to repeat the smack or he would get his head broken; and the Frenchman, who understood no more about the drift of the Briton's remark than did the sparrows on the street immediately hit out again. No fully reliable details of scene that ensued are to hand; but it is certain that the two sailors got at each Badeley, by 2 up and I to play. "The Coroner, in summing up the evidence given at the inquiry into the circumstances attending the death of Mr W. R. Carew, reviewed the important testimony of Dr Divers and said the evidence seems to negative the supposition that the deceased administered the arsenic to himself either intentionally or unintentionally Then if he did not administer it himself, some other hand must have given him the poison. Who can that have been? Naturally suspicion will first fall upon the nurse, upon his wife, Mrs. Carew, who was in sole charge of his nursing, with hardly any assistance except the sending up occasionally of a drink of milk or boof tea by one of the servants. If it was not Mrs. Carew, it may have been some one outside - and that introduces the mention of Annie Luke. The case which the able counsel for Mrs Carew has been endeavouring to make out, I take to be this: that on or about the 10th October last a woman named Annie Luke, with whom Mr Carew had previous relations in England or elsewhere. came to Yokohama, and in the course of Mr Carow's illness, during an interval in which Mrs Carew was not at the bedside of her husband, found entrance to the deceased and administered the poison. that is not the implication. I fail to see what the object of all this evidence as to Annie Luke can bc. Now, gentlemen, Annie Luke has been seen, according to the testimony of Mrs Carew, on the day of the Regatta, on the 10th of October. Mrs. Carew swears that a woman dressed in black and wearing a voil, called, desiring to see Mr Carow, that finding he was not at home she made an appointment for 4.30 that afternoon, and stated that if she did not call then she would come next morning. She did not keep that appointment. That is the sole clear statement as to the appearance in the flesh of Annie Luke. No doubt, the annh testified that on one occasion during Mrs Carew's absence from her husband's bedside a woman called and inquired after Mr Carew and asked where his bedroom was. She could give no particulars, as it was dark. That may have been Annie. Luke, or it may have been a neighbour coming kindly to inquire. But what is clear is that Mrs Carew mentioned a woman ia black on the 10th. This woman comes, if not into appearance, into hearing, on the 10th, and she disappears, as mysteriously as she appeared, on the 29th, after writing s couple of letters signed 'A.L.'—one to Mr Lowder and one to myself. The most diligent search to find any evidence of corporeal presence, where * she has stayed or of her whereabouts during her twenty days' stay in Yokohama, has been utterly ineffectual. Gentlemen, I take upon myself the responsibility of saying that in considering your verdict you need not complicate your minds much by any considerations as to the share which Annie Luke may have taken in the tragedy. It remains then for you to consider the evidence of Mrs Carew horself. She admits-after at first denying it-that Briton, whose affections were less demon- for a bed-pan and a bottle of Fowler's solution. She also does not deny the fact tostified by Miss Jacob, that on the 21st she procured another ounce bettle from Maruva's. Her own handwriting is in evidence to show your that on the 17th and on the 21st she likewise procured half-nunce bottles from Schedel, of the Normal Dispensary. In her first evidence she admits having given the arsenic to her husband scaled up in paper. She denies, course, ever having administered arsenic to him as a medicine during his illness. It will be for you to consider the probabilities of the case. In coming to a conclusion as to the cause of Mr Caraw's death, as to how it was he was poisoned by arsenic, you will consider these various theories-the theory of suicide, intentional or by misadventure, and the theory of homicide by Annie Luke or by Mrs Carow. It will be your duty, gentlemen-I lay it down as a simple canon of sound reasoning. unon this as upon other subjects—to choose the hypothesis, to form that conclusion, which is at the same time the simplest of all and which fully accounts for all the snown facts of the case. The salient facts of the case I may recall briefly in applying that canon of reason. Mr and Mrs Curew were married some time in 1880—seven years ago. They lived on happy terms of conjugal affection till quite recently, when, by Mrs Carew's admission, unpleasant discussions arose on a certain point. That point was money matters. In July lastbut I had better perhaps read Mrs Carew's evidence as supplying or assuming to supply what Mr Lowder, her Counsel, considered was wanting, namely, an explicable motive. The evidence on this point was

'In last June what conversation took place between your husband and yourself with reference to the remittance which should have arrived ?-It was in the month of July that I first spoke to him about the matter and expressed surprise that the such immediate want for that money, but the presence of the head of the firm of as he could give me no satisfactory answer Mesors. I thereupon consulted Mr Dickinson. Those unpleasant discussions arose in July last. The 10th of last October was Regatta day, a very inclement rainy day On Londonas some may remember. On that day two contemporaneous facts make their appearance in the story. One is the mentioning by Mrs Carew at the Boathouse to her husband, in the presence of other people, of a certain mysterious lady particularised as Annie Luke. The decord important fact on that day was the obtaining by Mrs Catew from Dr Wheeler of an order for against for her own malarial fever. On the 11th October, Mrs Carew procures from the Normal Dispensary, on the pre-scription of Dr Wheeler, a half-ounce that of the population at present. We true that the population at particular true that the proof of the Chinese. Coption that the proof of the Chinese. Coption that the particular care faithful the particular at the proof of the Chinese. Coption that the particular at the proof of the Chinese. Coption that the particular at the partic shopman, Hayashi Shichiro, could not distinetly identify as Mrs Carew, but who ho bolisyed to be probably Mrs Carew, and who signed the name 'Mrs Carew"; and the same person called on the 20th and paid for the medicines and got back the writing on which she had obtained them is on the 19th. On the 20th, the day following, another ounce bottle of arsenic is procured on Mrs Cares's written order by day preceding Mr Carew's death; a third posed the necessity for perfect preparedness ounce bottle of arsenic is procured from on the part of Great Britain; but he hoped Maruya's on Mrs Carew's written order, the development of the idea of arbitration by Mrs Carew's own messenger, Miss would mitigate the risk of International Jacobs; and likewise on the day pre-strife, ceding his death a third half ounce ENTE bottle is procated from the Normal Dispensary. On the following day at five o'clock Mr Carew diod. Those are the main facts upon which you are to draw your own intelligent inferences in order to bring in place. your verdict. If you reject the supposition suicide or death by misadventure; if you reject the story of Annie Luke as largely imaginary, suppositional, impalpable, intangible, unverifiable, you are driven to the conclusion that arrenic must in some way have been administered by Mrs Carow. If you come -if the evidence seems to point-to the conclusion that Mrs Carew's hand was the hand that administered the poison, you are bound by your duty and your oath to find out and determine in your own minds whether it was administered with the intent to kill. That is to say your verdict must either be manslaughter-that is to which won the Cambridgeshire, to explain say culpable negligence—or it must be wilful the inconsistency in his horse's running. murder. On the side of nogligence there are these considerations to be taken into account :- Mr Carew had, I believe, on a previous occasion, undoubtedly taken arsenic medicinally. That was explicitly in Egypt. testified to by Mrs Carew herself who said it was prescribed by a doctor in the Straits the Straits Settlements, so that neither Mr | foundland, and rich auriferous quartz have taken arsenic we have the testimony of Mr Dickinson, who declares that some Women's Suffrage and One Man One Vote years ago, at Zushi, Mr Carow told him Bills by large majorities. pression was made on his mind that Mr arew on some occasion told him that

Settlements, or Simon, and that she herself, administered arsenic medicinally in nor Mrs Carew was unacquainted with the medicinal use of arsenic. In support of the statement that he had previously medicinalthat some years previously in the Straits Settlements he had nearly killed himself by an overdose of arsenic. Then there is also the statement of Dr Munro that the imhe took arsonic. If you think that this previous administration or previous taking of arsonic by Mr Carew was sufficient to exempt Mrs Carew from due vigilance, as a nurse at her husband's bedside, you will come to the conclusion that there was an absence of intent to kill. But while I present these two considerations on the favourable side of the case, it is also m: duty to put to you the facts that seem to point in an opposite direction, the facts, in Bombay. An undesirable anxiety prethat seem to point to intention on the part i wails amongst all classes of natives, owing of Mrs. Carew. peculiar than the practice of adopting some representative of the animal world as an intimate. It may be conjectured that the first pets were those animals which had already proved themselves useful in the service of man, such as horses and dogs. By and bye as other animals became domosti-cated they were admitted to a degree of intimacy which, while not perhaps exactly that of the modern pet, was a step in that direction. Both the ancients as well as ourselves are known to have lavished no small amount of affection upon their favourites. Did not Alexander grieve for the loss of Bucephalus, and ender-your to console himself with Peritas, the lion-fighting dog, which cost him something over three handred pounds in India? And had not both horse and dog cities named after them? Did not the dog of Xanthippus swim beside his master's galley to Salamis ? The mares of Cimon, with which he was thrice victorious at the Olympic Games were buried beside his own tomb. We all remember how 'the young man's dog' accompanied the son of Tobit and the Angel Raphael on their remarkable journey. But the ancients had singular favourite retriever?

Nothing in human nature is perhaps more live. How strange was that abode at the post-painter's MS. verse.

Damascus where the late Lady Burton and.

hor distinguished husband resided. In addition to the ordinary live stock, consisting of fowls and goats together with the horses and camels, there was a Persian cat, a trapped as a cub in the desert, and presented by Holo Pacha to Sir Richard Burton to show his appreciation of the latter's conduct in averting what might have been a sous. Lady Burton was quite enthusiastic about this, the most remarkable of her note. He never did the household any harm, but frightened the other aminals, pspecially the cat : though he was in turn afraid of the buildogs, but used to side with them in their antipathy to a certain baker,

He used to play hide and seek with his mistress, and, as she naively remarks.

When he bit too hard I used to box his ears, when he was instantly good.' He used to sleep in his mistress's room, and when he fell a victim to poison administered by the neighbouring peasants, who were afraid of him, we are not surprised to hear that his death was the cause of much grief.

Another pet in this strange household was Kurdish dog, as big as a St. Bernard, and which looked like a hear; his name, dangerous outbreak of fanaticism in Dama-lamb, and a leopard. The last-named was and which looked like a hear; his name, 'Rasrawan,' was corrupted into 'Cuss.' He was an inveterate fighter, but a splendid watchdog. Indeed, the Burton menage was, as Sir Richard himself described it, a sort of House that Jack Built, for the pigeons attache seeds and destroyed the flowers, the cat preyed upon the pigeons, and was in turn worried by the dogs, while the leopard harried the goats to such an extent that one of them, in sheer disguat, went and committed suicida by drowning, while the favourite's yells almost scared the life out of the donkey and camel. But Lady Burton, intropid woman as she was, owns to having felt inghtened on the occasion of her visit to the wife of a German educate, whose residence at the time was a mud but in the desert, and whose only companions were a hyera and a lying, which slept on the lady's bed like two landings. The hyera received the visitor at the gate, infined at her hands and there put her face. Lady Burton stood her ground, FINE, OLD

REMARKS.

Unsurpassed as a tonic for the ladies. Once tried by them they will agree with the remark of our other lady friends and continue to patronize us. For the gentlemen it is a cooling and refreshing drink. All who have tried it stand by it. We only ask one trial and will then rest on our merits.
